Abuse Allegations Down, but Challenges Remain, Say U.S. Bishops in Report

By Gina Christian, OSV News
(OSV News) — Abuse allegations against Catholic clergy and religious in the U.S. declined last year, but challenges remain regarding protecting vulnerable adults and ensuring online safety, according to the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

On July 14, the USCCB’s Secretariat of Child and Youth Protection released the “2022 Annual Report – Findings and Recommendations on the Implementation of the Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People.”

USCCB President Archbishop Timothy P. Broglio of Military Services said in his preface the report was “a milestone accounting of the continued efforts in the ministry of protection, healing, and accompaniment.”

The document — covering the period July 1, 2021, to June 30, 2022 — consists of a progress report from the secretariat; an audit report conducted by the Rochester, New York-based consultants StoneBridge Business Partners; and a survey of abuse allegations and costs by the Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA) at Georgetown University.

Now in its 12th year of performing the audit, StoneBridge visited 62 dioceses and eparchies, 48 in person and 14 virtually.

The report itself is the 20th of its kind since 2002, when the U.S. bishops established the “Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People” as a number of clerical abuse scandals emerged.

Commonly called the “Dallas Charter” for the city in which the bishops met at the time of its ratification, the document lays out a comprehensive set of procedures for addressing allegations of sexual abuse of minors by Catholic clergy. The charter also includes guidelines for reconciliation, healing, accountability and prevention of abuse.

During the 2022 report period, 1,998 individuals came forward with 2,704 allegations of abuse, with claims down 399 from 2021 and 1,548 from 2020. The decrease was largely due to resolutions of allegations received through lawsuits, compensation programs and bankruptcies. Most allegations (83%) were initially brought to diocesan officials by an attorney.

Sixteen reports during the period involved current minors, with all other allegations made by adults citing abuse as minors.

The CARA portion of the report said that 194 responding dioceses and eparchies had judged 245 allegations of sexual abuse of a minor by a priest.

Two resignations due to health concerns and the transfer of a religious sister left three vacancies on that review board during the audit period. The seats “have since all been filled, bringing the number of representa-

Papal Envoy Gives Biden Letter from Pope, Urges U.S. Leaders to Support Peace

By Carol Glatz, Catholic News Service

VATICAN CITY (CNS) — Cardinal Matteo Zuppi hand-delivered a letter from Pope Francis to U.S. President Joe Biden as part of his three-day papal mission to help promote humanitarian efforts and open avenues of peace in Ukraine.

The pope had sent the cardinal, who is archbishop of Bologna and president of the Italian bishops’ conference, to Washington July 17-19 for meetings with top church and government leaders, including members of the U.S. House of Representatives, the Senate Prayer Breakfast.

Cardinal Zuppi and other members of a Vatican delegation went to the White House July 18 “where they were received by President Joseph R. Biden, to whom Cardinal Zuppi handed a letter from the Holy Father, emphasizing the pope’s sorrow for the suffering caused by the war,” said a Vatican communique published July 19.

“The meeting, which began shortly after 5 p.m. and lasted over an hour, took place in an atmosphere of great cordiality and mutual listening,” it said.

During the conversation, assurance was made of there being a “full willingness to support humanitarian initiatives, especially for children and those who are most fragile, both to respond to this urgency and to foster paths of peace,” the Vatican said.

Early July 19, the Vatican delegation attended the Senate Prayer Breakfast, which is held Wednesday mornings in the U.S. Capitol for senators to meet, talk and pray together.

During this gathering, the Vatican said, “Cardinal Zuppi had the opportunity to brief the participants on the meetings he had over the various stages of his peace mission. During the meeting, appreciation was expressed for the Holy See’s efforts and the responsibility of each individual in stride for peace was emphasized.”

He also traveled to Russia and Ukraine in recent months to meet with church and government officials on the pope’s behalf.

Cardinal Zuppi arrived in Washington the evening of July 17 and had a meeting with USCCB President Archbishop Timothy P. Broglio of Military Services at the apostolic nunciature.

“Some reflections were exchanged on the war in Ukraine and the Holy See’s initiatives in support of victims and peace” during that meeting, the Vatican said.

The next morning the Vatican delegation went to the Rayburn House Office Building and met with some members of the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, also known as the Helsinki Commission. This independent U.S. government commission seeks to promote human rights, military security and economic cooperation in 57 countries in Europe, Eurasia and North America.

The Vatican delegation, which included Cardinal-designate Christophe Pierre, apostolic nuncio to the United States, and Msgr. Scipio M. Horgan, charge d’affaires at the apostolic nunciature, presented to the commission “the nature and conduct of the mission entrusted to it by the pope, reflecting together on ways in which it could be made more effective.”

According to Cardinal-designate Pierre, the top priority for Cardinal Zuppi in his meeting with President Biden was the repatriation of children forcibly deported from Ukraine to Russia.

The overall objective of that closed-door meeting, he told the Italian daily, La Repubblica, was “to contribute to peace and more precisely to cover the humanitarian aspects, in particular concerning children. The discussion revolved around this.”

When asked if this meant that the immediate goal was facilitating the reunification of Ukrainian children with their families, the cardinal-designate said, “Yes, that is the cardinal’s, and obviously the pope’s, more specific goal, also because it is a more concrete issue.”

“Obviously, however, the idea is to think about peace, in the complicated context that exists,” he said in the interview with the newspaper, published in Italy July 19.

“The cardinal is very realistic, we try to do what is possible,” Cardinal-designate Pierre said.

In general, Cardinal Zuppi’s mission was “to listen and be listened to. To report on what has already happened in order to see how one can proceed,” the papal nuncio said.

“This is a first step. We are realists, we know perfectly well that this is not easy. But the pope wants to contribute to (bringing) attention to a situation that will in any case have to reach an outcome,” Cardinal-designate Pierre said.

Meanwhile, the White House said in a statement July 18 that President Biden shared with Cardinal Zuppi “his wishes for Pope Francis’ continued ministry and global leadership and welcomed the recent nomination of a U.S. archbishop for cardinal, referring to Chicago-born Cardinal-designate Robert F. Prevost, prefect of the Dicastery for Bishops.

The U.S. president and Cardinal Zuppi “also discussed the Holy See’s efforts providing humanitarian aid to address the widespread suffering caused by Russia’s continuing aggression in Ukraine, as well as the Vatican’s advocacy for the return of forcibly deported Ukrainian children,” the White House statement said.

Pope Francis had sent Cardinal Zuppi to Washington as part of his ongoing humanitarian efforts to help Ukraine.

The July 17-19 visit is “in the context of the mission intended to promote peace in Ukraine and aims to exchange ideas and opinions on the current tragic situation and to support humanitarian initiatives to alleviate the suffering of the most affected and fragile people, especially children,” the Vatican said in a communique July 17.

The cardinal visited Bucha and Zhytomyr in early June and met with Ukrainian officials including President Volodymyr Zelenskyy. In Moscow in late June, he met with Russian Orthodox Patriarch Kirill of Moscow; Yury Ushakov, a Kremlin foreign policy adviser and former ambassador to the United States; and Maria Lvova-Belova, Russia’s commissioner for children’s rights, accused by the International Criminal Court of aiding the abduction and deportation of Ukrainian children to Russia.

Cardinal Zuppi had told reporters at a book presentation in Rome July 4 that the Vatican was working on a “mechanism to help Ukrainian children that have been taken into Russia, Vatican News reported.

“The children should be able to return to Ukraine,” he said. “The first step is verifying the children and then seeing how to return them, starting with the most fragile.”

“There is no peace plan (or) mediation,” he said, “there is a great aspiration that the violence ends, that human lives can be saved starting with the defense of the youngest.”

The cardinal said July 2 that Pope Francis’ concern is to “create all opportunities to see, to listen and encourage everything that can lead toward a resolution to the conflict.”

“Our course there are small openings, we must look for them,” he said. “It is precisely in the darkness that the light of peace must be sought while knowing no one has a magic wand.”

Beckley’s St. Francis de Sales School Celebrating 65 Years

They were part of the first class to attend St. Francis de Sales School in Beckley when it opened its doors in 1957. For 65 years, John and Ramona Rist continue to remain actively involved with the school, go to Bible study weekly at the parish, and have grandchildren in classes there.

“I was 10 then,” remembers Ramona about leaving public school to attend a Catholic school. “It was so awesome because there were nuns and all the little Catholic girls wanted to be nuns when they grew up. We had four nuns, and the other classes were taught by lay teachers. They were wonderful.”

In those days the nuns were from the Sisters of St. Joseph, Wheeling, and as it was then, the school continues to be accountable to the diocese and the superintendent of Catholic schools. John quickly remembers that the nuns didn’t hesitate on homework. “That’s not a complaint now,” he said. “I’m glad.”

The couple has been married for 51 years and believes in the importance of quality education.

“The nuns were teaching us stuff other than math and history,” explains Ramona. “They were reinforcing what our parents were teaching us at home, like prayers before we eat, and Catholicism, and it was reinforced in the school.”

According to the school principal, Mary Grace DePolo-Peck, St. Francis began when concerned parents wanted something better for their children. “These parents wanted their children to know a living God,” she said.

While the school has always been open to the public, the goal was to open a school that followed the Catholic religion.

Respect for faith

“We teach Catholicism here, but it is open to everyone,” adds Father Leonard Smith, pastor of the school and St. Francis de Sales Parish. For example, the seventh-grade religion class is made of up various denominations – five Catholics, five Protestants, and five Muslim students.

It can make for interesting conversations, he adds. “We were comparing the concept of fasting in the Catholic Church and fasting as they know it in the traditions of Islam,” he pointed out. “So, there are parallels.”

and there are differences.”

Acknowledging the inclusive nature of the student body, Father Smith continued, “It is a Catholic school, and we are serious about trying to maintain the Catholic identity. And the families know that when they enroll their children here.”

Part of their Catholic teaching is respect for others.

“There are those that have no belief, Jews, Christians, Muslims, we all believe in the same God,” he explained. “We all believe very different things about that God, but we believe in the same God. Because of that area of commonality, Father Smith believes that gives the ground for unity and sharing discussion.

He continued, “Sometimes there are differences that lead to productive discussion. The faith of others is respected here more than it might be in some other schools.”

Respect for quality education

Father Smith came to the parish in 2021 and notes the commitment of the parish to supporting the school. But he also recognizes there are a lot of challenges to having a school.

Years ago, there was no tuition, mostly due to the women’s religious teaching in schools, like the nuns of St. Joseph.

“They worked for very little to nothing and so it didn’t cost as much to provide a Catholic education. In recent years, with the reduction in the number of women religious teaching in schools, we must rely on lay teachers,” he explained.

“The tuition is there to pay the salaries and take care of the school and administer the school. There are real costs associated with it.”

The parish provides a monthly subsidy that the school depends on to maintain and sustain the quality education they provide.

“Our teachers are state certified or working toward their certificate,” said DePolo-Peck. “Thankfully we have been blessed with very dedicated individuals that go beyond instructional expectations with their students.”

The challenges and opportunities that St. Francis faces are not unique to the parochial school.

Those challenges and opportunities include “keeping up with technology and funding to support it, finding and retaining qualified teachers, dealing with bullying or disrespectful behaviors that stem from the misuse of social media, and helping students deal with outside influences that impact them in negative ways,” the principal noted.

65 years and counting

The 2022-2023 school year represents 65 years of education for St. Francis.

Opportunities for accessible education continue to improve, said DePolo-Peck.

“We offer Diocesan Tuition Assistance to Catholic and non-Catholic families based on need. The HOPE Scholarship program from the West Virginia State Treasurer’s Office is another avenue of support for a family’s quest for Catholic education.”

According to Father Smith, the Catholic Church teaches that parents are the primary educators of their children.

“The church’s mission and role in that is what we call subsidiary,” he explained. “We are helping parents fulfill their primary responsibilities by helping parents to educate their children in their faith and to educate them in all the other areas of life so that they can flourish.”

“We are educating the whole person, and part of that is their spiritual lives.”

The school offers Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, and 4-H. There are opportunities for elementary basketball, volleyball, and cheer. Middle school children can do volleyball, cheer, track, cross country, and soccer.

The sports teams often play opposite local public schools.

They also offer chess, robotics, art, and drama clubs.

DePolo-Peck added, “Today, St. Francis de Sales School remains a place where faith and knowledge meet. Just as the nuns did a long time ago, we encourage students to think critically. We teach strong communication skills. We foster community involvement. We build self-esteem and confidence.

“These attributes or life skills alone go beyond a grade point average. We walk and talk with God throughout our day.”

Catholic-Jewish Conference to Confront Rising Antisemitism

Franciscan University and The Philos Project to Co-Host Event to Address Shared Challenges in a Secular Age

STEUBENVILLE, OHIO — Franciscan University of Steubenville and The Philos Project will co-host Nostra Aetate and the Future of Catholic-Jewish Relations at a Time of Rising Antisemitism on Oct. 24-26.

Leading Catholic and Jewish voices will address the recent rise in antisemitism, the history of Catholic-Jewish relations, and the significance of Nostra Aetate, the Second Vatican Council’s declaration on the relation of the Catholic Church to non-Christian religions. The shared experiences of faithful Jewish and Catholic communities confronted with the challenges of secular progressivism will also be explored.

“Franciscan University is delighted to collaborate with The Philos Project on the important work of promoting Catholic-Jewish relations and condemning the recent rise in antisemitism,” said Dr. Steve Hildebrand, vice president for Academic Affairs at Franciscan University. “This conference will be a shining example of the truth that fidelity to our respective convictions as Christians and Jews demands and does not undermine our fraternity and our mutual respect.

“The rise of secular progressivism makes us able to see more truly and more clearly not only what we have in common but also the unique contribution that the Judeo-Christian tradition has made in the history of human civilization and the history of human thought,” Hildebrand added.

“Franciscan University is excited to partner with The Philos Project on this important effort to strengthen Jewish-Catholic ties,” said Andrew Doran, senior research fellow and Catholic director at The Philos Project. “At this time of rising antisemitism, Catholics shouldn’t be silent. We also stand with Jewish institutions like Yeshiva University on the struggle to preserve religious liberty in America.”

At the conclusion of the conference, participants will release a coalition statement opposing antisemitism and commemorating the 5-year anniversary of the horrific Oct. 27, 2018, Tree of Life synagogue shooting in Pittsburgh and the 58-year anniversary of Nostra Aetate.

Conference speakers include Rabbi Dr. Meir Y. Soloveichik, senior rabbi of Congregation Shearith Israel in New York City and director of the Zahava and Mosheh Straus Center for Torah and Western Thought, Yeshiva University; Sohrab Ahmari, founder and editor of Compact and visiting fellow at Franciscan’s Veritas Center for Ethics in Public Life; Peter Berkvitz, Tad and Dianne Taube senior fellow, Hoover Institution, Stanford University; Dr. Faydra Shapiro, senior fellow with The Philos Project and research fellow with the Center for the Study of Religions, Tel Hai College, Israel; Dr. Robert P. George, McCormick Professor of Jurisprudence and director of the James Madison Program in American Ideals and Institutions, Princeton University.

El Papa envía un enviado a Washington D.C. como parte de su misión para ayudar a Ucrania

Por Carol Glatz, Catholic News Service

CIUDAD DEL VATICANO (CNS)—El Papa Francisco ha enviado al cardenal Matteo Zuppi, su enviado especial, a Washington D.C., como parte de sus esfuerzos humanitarios en curso para ayudar a Ucrania.

La visita del 17 al 19 de julio "se enmarca en la misión destinada a promover la paz en Ucrania y tiene como objetivo intercambiar ideas y opiniones sobre la trágica situación actual y apoyar las iniciativas humanitarias para aliviar el sufrimiento de las personas más afectadas y frágiles, especialmente los niños", dijo el Vaticano en un comunicado el 17 de julio.

El cardenal viajó a Rusia y Ucrania en los últimos meses para reunirse con funcionarios del gobierno en nombre del Papa.

El cardenal Zuppi, arzobispo de Bolonia y presidente de la Conferencia Episcopal Italiana, "viajará a Washington D.C. como enviado del Santo Padre Francisco", dijo el Vaticano en una nota en Roma el 4 de julio, el cardenal dijo a los periodistas que ya había hablado con el Papa sobre su viaje a Moscú y que el Vaticano está trabajando actualmente en un "mecanismo" para ayudar a los niños ucraínos que han sido llevados a Rusia, informó Vatican News.

"Los niños deberían poder regresar a Ucrania", dijo. "El siguiente paso será, en primer lugar, examinar a los niños y, a continuación, ver cómo recuperarlos, empezando por los más frágiles".

"No hay un plan de paz (o) medición", dijo, "hay un gran aspiración de que la violencia termine, de que se puedan salvar vidas humanas empeñando por la defensa de los más jóvenes".

En su intervención en un acto sobre la guerra en Europa el 1 de julio, el cardenal Zuppi dijo que las autoridades ucraínas están solicitando encarecidamente la ayuda del Vaticano en los esfuerzos humanitarios, en particular para los mayores y a los niños pequeños.

El cardenal dijo el 2 de julio que la preocupación del Papa Francisco es "crear todas las oportunidades para ver, escuchar y fomentar todo lo que pueda conducir hacia una resolución del conflicto". "Por supuesto que hay pequeñas aperturas, hay que buscarla", dijo. "Es precisamente en la oscuridad donde hay que buscar la luz de la paz sabiendo que nadie tiene una varita mágica".

El cardenal Zuppi viajó a Ucrania los días 5 y 6 de junio, donde visitó Bucha y Kiev. En la capital se reunió con funcionarios ucraínos, entre ellos el presidente Volodymyr Zelensky. Tras su reunión del 6 de junio, el presidente escribió en su canal de Telegram que sólo el aislamiento diplomático y la presión sobre Rusia podrían traer una “paz justa” a Ucrania.
